Wellness

For offices spaces, it is imperative that designers focus on the physical and psychological wellness of its visitors. If this is achieved, the staff will become more productive while the patients will have a more enjoyable experience and are more likely to return.

This can be achieved by adding elements to support: technology, physical comfort, rejuvenation, flexibility, connections to nature, touch down spaces, respite spaces, and privacy.

SEATTLE, Washington

Seattle is the fastest growing major city in the United states and serves as a major gate way for trade with Asia. The seaport city rests beside Puget Sound, which is an inlet of the Pacific Ocean. Its culture is greatly connected to the ocean because of trade through the Port of Seattle and tourism that the west coast city attracts.

Gold

Throughout the active spaces, yellow is used because it is psychologically the happiest color, stimulates mental processes, instills optimism, and sparks creativity.

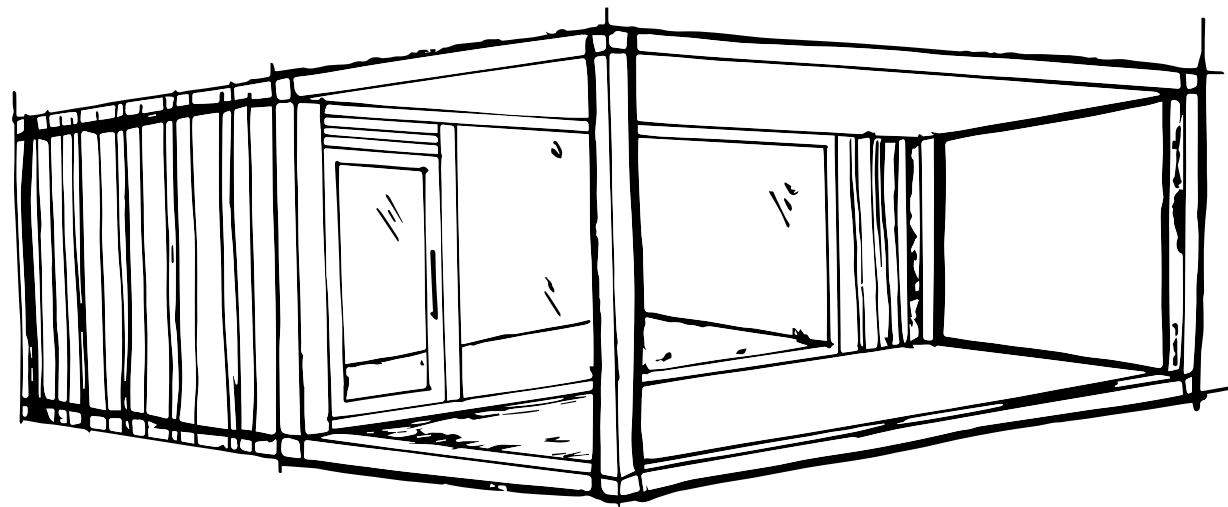

Azure Blue

Throughout the inactive, respite spaces, blue is used to promote tranquility and calmness in order to encourage rejuvenation.
